

FANTASYVILLE PRODUCTIONS LLC

BOOK CATALOG

Welcome to the Fantasyville Productions, LLC catalog! Fantasyville Productions, LLC is queer-owned and operated. We publish works by LGBTQ+ creators and their allies who are bringing new life to the fantasy genre.

Currently we offer comic books, graphic novels, zines, short story collections, and art books. We hope to expand our creator roster and our offerings very soon, so keep checking back for new updates.

Please note that products are shipped from our home office, where we work with reused and recycled packaging wherever we can. Because we dream of a world with as little waste as possible.

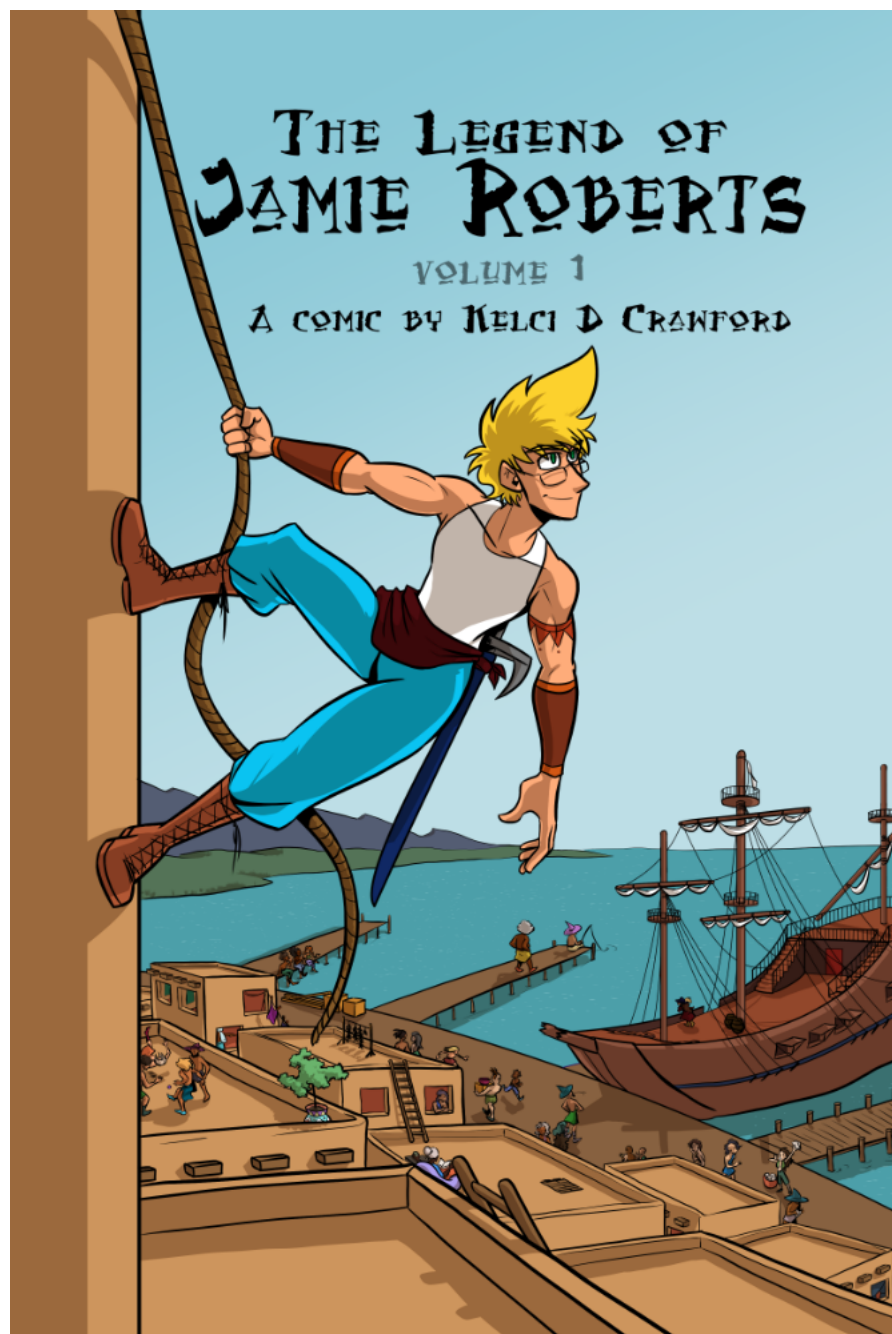

Prices listed come in two lines: RETAIL and WHOLESALE. "Retail" is the suggested retail price, and "wholesale" is the price available to you, based on a minimum order detailed with each product.

When you are ready to order, email Kelci Crawford at kelci@fantasyvilleproductions.com with details on what you would like to order. We will then assemble an invoice for you with shipping included, due within 30 days of receipt. Your order will be shipped when payment is received.

If the products you receive are damaged or lost, please send an email to kelci@fantasyvilleproductions.com within 30 days of receipt of your package for a refund.

Have more questions? Reach out to us and we will get back to you as soon as possible.

Thank you, and without further ado, here is the catalog!

The Legend of Jamie Roberts, Volume 1 By Kelci D Crawford

Jamie Roberts is neither a boy or a girl - they're A PIRATE! One day, during a raid, Jamie and their two best friends, Thomas and Daniel, find an unfinished map to a land they've not seen. So they retire from the great seas and become bodyguards to a king. Along the way, they meet a witch on the side of the road, are greeted with visions of Spirits, and discover that the King of Maliwe is acting strangely.

The Dance Macabre

The sun shone brightly on the Bavarian countryside and the ale flowed freely as the four friends sat together in the beer garden, each with a tankard of golden beer in their hands. It was where they met frequently throughout their lives since the monks of the abbey had deemed them of age to partake in their brews. Men talked of women and far off lands full of adventure at this table, but today was quite a different one indeed.

Johan, tall and stout with broad shoulders and a thick brown beard to match his long hair, sat back stroking his beard thoughtfully. "And what exactly was it about this man that lead you to believe he could be trusted?" He asked Kurt, who was still leaning forward with an intense and excited look on his face.

Kurt grinned, his short blonde hair rustling gently in the breeze as his pointed chin jutted forward, the curled goatee he had been toying with resuming its natural curl. "Absolutely nothing. But don't you see? That's why it's so perfect! How better to hide a message in plain sight than by making the one who delivers it completely innocuous?"

"And pray tell, what message would one want to hide in plain sight?" asked Hans. He was a thin man, but the tallest of the lot. His short black hair hung loosely around his face and draped around the fist that supported his forehead.

Kurt turned to him, still smiling. "A key to the underworld."

The other three leaned forward, annoyed exasperation on their faces.

"Oh please, do continue." Kristoph said, brushing his flowing dark brown hair back out of his eyes, letting it fall around his broad shoulders and speaking in the tone of voice one would use when calling another out on a jest.

"From this man I obtained a map. It leads to a cave where the key to the underworld is kept". Kurt pulled an old, weathered looking scrap
